THE SHIP-BUILDING TRADE.

WHY AMERICAN BUILDERS OF IRON SHIPS CANNOT COMPETE WITH FOREIGNERS.

[From the N. Y. Herald.]

Mr. E. Platt Stratton, one of the proprietors of the Flushing Iron-works, has given considerable thought to the subject of the construction of iron vessels in this country, and the causes to which he attributes the decadence of American tonnage are somewhat different from those usually advanced. Mr. Stratton has the advantage of a thorough training as a machinist and mechanic, and he has also had practical experience in ship-building. Besides his actual experience in mechanics, he held the position of Local United States Inspector of Steam Vessels in this city for seven years, and subsequently the more important post of Supervising Inspector of Steam Vessels. A Times reporter called upon him yesterday for the purpose of obtaining his views of iron-ship building in this country.

"To what do you attribute the decrease of American tonnage?" asked the reporter.

"Primarily it is caused by the change from wooden to iron hulls," said Mr. Stratton. "You take a wooden vessel and an iron one of the same size, and the latter will be fully 10 per cent lighter, and consequently will carry about 10 per cent. more cargo on the same draught of water. The prime factor in commercial pursuits is to carry the greatest amount of cargo up in the lightest weight of hull. The English ship builders and merchants were quick to perceive the lasting qualities of an iron vessel over a wooden one. A boat built of wood will deteriorate about 10 per cent. a year, while an iron boat will not deteriorate more than 2 per cent. in the same length of time. Of course I do not take into calculation accidents or special causes that might work injury to a vessel, but merely allude to the natural wear and tear. Take the relative quality of American and English iron, such as is used in the construction of iron ships, and you will find that the American iron is from 8 to 10 per cent stronger than the foreign material. In place of considering this fact, which is a most important one in its relation to iron-ship building, the Boards of Marine Underwriters of the principal sea-ports of America seemingly preferred to err on the side of safety in the underwriting business, and decided to adopt the English Lloyd rules for the construction of iron ships. By taking this step the Board of Underwriters made it necessary for American ship builders to construct their vessels from 8 to 10 per cent. stronger than vessels of similar size and pattern built abroad."

"Upon what is the estimate cost of an iron vessel based?"

"The cost of an iron boat is based entirely upon the number of pounds of iron used in her construction. If the American marine underwriters would adopt rules recognizing the superiority of American iron for ship-building purposes they would decrease the weight of the hulls of American vessels in the exact proportion of the superiority of American over English iron, which will figure not less than 8 per cent. In demonstration of this theory the English people are now going extensively into the construction of steel vessels. A plate of steel is fully 30 per cent. stronger than a plate of iron of the same size. The use of steel in the construction of ships reduces the weight of the hull and enables the vessel to carry a proportionately increased amount of dead weight in the shape of cargo.

"From what period do you date the decadence of American shipping?"

"This condition of things has been going on for fully 10 years, and is due purely to the lack of proper attention and consideration on the part of American marine underwriters. A majority of the men appointed as inspectors by the marine underwriters have little, if any, scientific or mechanical knowledge of ship-building. Most of the inspectors are undoubtedly able navigators and competent ship-masters, and are probably good judges of the strength and condition of wooden ships, but they know very little of the tensile strength of any other material than wood and the custom-ary methods of ship construction and fastening. The character of construction and the class of workmanship in an iron ship, as compared with a wooden one, is as different as the skill of the mechanic who may be required to build a steam boiler is from the cooper who may be required to construct a barrel. The principal source of strength in a wooden ship is her frame, while the principal source of strength in an iron boat is her plating. The principle you will find laid down in the works of John Scott Russell, the eminent English marine architect."

"How do you regard the question of labor as pertaining to iron-ship building in this country?"

"The matter of labor ought not to be considered as an obstacle in the way of building iron vessels in this country. As a matter of fact it requires less skilled labor to construct an iron ship than it does to construct a wooden one. Of course, certain exceptions are to be made in relation to those who have charge of the construction of the different parts of the work. Such men must necessarily be specially educated up to their duties. The greater part of the labor that is now employed in the numerous ship-yards on the Kenebec River in Maine, could in a very brief period be educated so as to make a very fair class of iron-ship builders. Of course, the value of their services would continue to improve as their experience increased, as has been thoroughly demonstrated in the experience of the ship-building firms who were first to start their works on the line of the Delaware River. As regards the cost of the production of the power necessary to propel an ocean steamer, the iron manufacturers of this country are fully up to the manufacturers of any other country."

"Does the tariff, in your opinion, operate disadvantageously on American ship-building?"

"I do not think it does to any great extent. The truth is, the tariff has nothing like the bearing upon ship-building that most people think it has. The tendency now is strongly toward steel in the place of iron for ship-building purposes. That being the case, the duties should be reduced on steel blooms and Bessemer metal to such an extent as to compel the monopolists of the steel interest in America to reduce the price, in order to meet the degree of cheapness with which a similar article is produced abroad. There is no question but an iron ship can be built as cheaply here as in England if the proper attention is paid to the details of her construction, by reducing the weight of her hull in proportion to the superiority of our iron."

WHY NOT BUILD IRON SHIPS IN MAINE?

To the Editor of the Whig and Courier:

John Roach said in his speech before the National Convention of ship owners, assembled at the Board of Trade Rooms in Boston, October 7th, 1880, that the cost of building iron ships in America, was ten per cent. more than on the Clyde, and that ninety per cent. of the cost of such ships is labor in the construction of the ships and machinery, and the cost was per pound in weight.

By a statement recently made by E. Platt Stratton, a practical iron worker and engineer, who ought to know, American iron is ten per cent. stronger than English, by actual test, and an American built iron ships of equal strength of the English, would be 10 per cent. lighter in weigh. Granting this, we in Maine have a decided advantage over New York or Delaware by the use of Katahdin iron, as that is admitted to be from six to eight per cent. stronger than other American iron, actual test by manufacturers of wire and car wheels, and by using it a ship of equal strength to the English build would be sixteen to eighteen per cent. lighter, and would be that more buoyant, and drawing a lighter draft of water, and carry more weight in cargo per ton measurement.

Now that we have a railroad open from Bangor to the furnace of the smelting works at Katahdin, and only fifty-eight miles, with uniform standard gauge, iron can be transported from the furnace to Bangor, or Bath, or Portland, at less cost than from any furnace in the United States, to a ship yard now constructing iron ships. Then our laborers in Maine will cost 10 per cent. less than in New York or Philadelphia, as it costs the mechanic less to live here, and with a vigorous climate he is able to do more work. A mechanic in a Bath ship yard will do more work in eight hours than one on the Clyde in twelve. Our ship builder in a few months would do as good work on iron ships as men in England, as but little skilled labor is required in the construction of iron ships, as machinery does most of that. Why, then, cannot an iron ship be built at Bath cheaper than in England?

F.

MR. VANDERBILT'S STABLE.

How his Famous Horses are Cared for.

A VISIT TO THEIR LUXURIOUS HOME ON MURRAY HILL.

[N. Y. Tribune.]

As the dwellings of modern Americans of wealth have developed into palaces, so the stables of rich owners of horses have become buildings fitted up in a manner that surpasses in costliness and elegance the houses of a large majority of the population. Pressed brick, brown stone and marble, costly woods and plate-glass combine to make the millionaire's stable a place of luxury and even splendor. Maud S. and the other trotting wonders in which William H. Vanderbilt takes pride are housed in a manner befitting the pets of the richest man in America.

A Tribune reporter visited Mr. Vanderbilt's stable at Forty-second street and Madison avenue, recently, and was shown through the building. Entering from the office, the visitor found himself in a spacious room. It was just after dark, and numerous gas jets were burning around the walls, the light streaming through porcelain globes, each ornamented with a broad band, in the centre of which was a horse's head. Walls, floor and ceiling were all of polished wood, cherry, ash and black walnut being arranged in strips and panels in a way that brought out the beauties of each to the best advantage. In the place a long mirror reflected the line of sombre and stately coaches opposite, and in another a case of nickel-plated bits on a background of black velvet hung glittering on the wall. A set of Fox's English hunting scenes, and oil portraits of Maud S. and Fullerton in heavy gilt frames, relieved the bareness of the ash walls. In the corner, on a platform of cement, a stableman was washing a light wagon which had been whirled over the road that afternoon behind Aldine and Early Rose. The stable implements which flashed in the gaslight with their heavy mountings of polished brass, and the pail in which he dipped his sponge was decorated with a big brass monogram. There was no scent of the stable in the air. The noises of the horses in the stalls a few feet away could scarcely be heard through the thick walls and the heavy doors of black walnut and plate glass. Only the man at work on the wagon in the corner and the long line of coaches against the wall gave the large, well-proportioned and really elegant apartment any appearance of connection with a stable. There is no loud noise, no confusion and no dirt in this big hall at any time. Even when some famous trotter comes into the stable, fresh from some new exploit on the road, or the stout coach-horses come in champing their bits and rattling their harnesses heavy with silver, the wheels of the light wagon or the heavy coach roll on a broad strip of carpet stretched diagonally across the floor, and there is no din or turmoil.

Looking into the harness room, large cases, with fronts of plate glass, extending on all sides, were seen. The walls of the room above the cases were of plate glass, and the light from the courtyard streamed through in a flood upon the shining black and the gleaming silver of the harnesses. Here were all sorts of harnesses, from the plain affair whose only ornament was the monogram of Mr. Vanderbilt, to those in which the leather was almost hidden by a profusion of heavy silver decorations. At the command of Mr. Phelps, the superintendent of the stable, two grooms rolled back two immense sliding doors, and a dim-lit apartment roofed by a dome of glass was entered. Up and down the centre, on the hard cement floor, were ranged a row of light vehicles and around them extended a tan bark track. This is called the "walking track," and here the horses are exercised. The red pressed brick walls of this place were hung with pictures of hunting scenes and celebrated horses which, with their bits of color showing in the semi-obscurity, produced a pleasant and striking effect.

The most interesting part of the stable, however, was that devoted to the horses. Here the light from numerous gas jets showed long lines of box-stalls of light and polished wood trimmed with black walnut. Beyond was a line of open stalls where stood the powerful black carriage horses. Even here there was no unpleasant odor, nothing but the smell of the clean straw with which the horses had been bedded down for the night. Up and down the passage way between the stalls moved about sturdy grooms carrying feed for the animals and giving the last finishing touch to the bedding. The shadows cast by the stalls, the deep panels of the roof and the dark forms of the coachhorses produced a striking combination of light and shade. The picture was relieved and supplied with color by the bright blue checked shirts of the grooms and the mixing of plaited straw and red tape behind the stalls of the coachhorses, and the effect was still further heightened by the glitter of polished brass which adorned all the stable utensils and shone in the gaslight. Opening the door of a large box-stall at the end of the room, the reporter entered. It was filled only by the light that came over the top and was in a state of half darkness. In one corner, up to her knees in straw, stood Maud, S. quietly eating her well-earned oats. Maud did not quite like the idea of being disturbed at her supper but, like a well-bred creature of gentle blood, gave very little indication of her annoyance. The blanket covering her was removed and her fleet-limbed symmetry was brought out to the fullest advantage by the background of light wood and straw. She submitted to being patted and caressed with the utmost unconcern when she saw that the intruder was Mr. Phelps, and paid strict attention to her supper.

Looking into the other stalls the other racers were seen quietly crunching away on their suppers in the twilight. Bay Dick looked up inquiringly as Mr. Phelps and the reporter entered his stall. After regarding his visitors intently for a moment he gave a contemptuous snort and returned to his feed. When Aldine's stall was reached her blanket was removed and her good points commented upon. Aldine submitted gracefully—in fact, seemed rather to like it and to be proud of the praise that was lavished upon her. Near the door leading into the courtyard was what appeared to be a box-stall, but which upon the door being opened, was seen to be a bedroom. Here every night sleeps one of the hostlers, in order to be on hand if anything goes wrong with the horses. In the partition dividing the room from the main apartment burned a bright light encased in glass. It was half in the sleeping-room and half outside, the light filtering into the sleeping-room through a green baize curtain drawn over the glass on that side. At night, when all the other lights are turned out, this one is kept burning.

Mr. Vanderbilt's stable was begun in 1879 and finished in October of the following year. It cost $60,000 without the land which is said to be worth at least as much more. The materials of which it is constructed are pressed brick and brownstone. It has a frontage of 75 feet in Fifty-second street, and 100 feet in Madison avenue. All the rooms are spacious and the appointments of the finest. The box-stall occupied by Maud S. is 20 by 24 feet, and the others, though not so large, are still of good size.

There are at present in Mr. Vanderbilt's stable, Maud S., Aldine, Early Rose, Lander, Lysander, Bay Dick, Small Hope, Charles Dickens and four coach horses. There are six large coaches, eight light wagons and two sulkies. Six men are employed as grooms and hostlers.

Somerset.

The Journal says the location of the S. & A. Road was completed on the 9th inst. Its total length is twelve and one half miles. It traverses an easy country with steepest grade in Skowhegan village, about 85 feet to the mile. There are three small bridges, 20 to 25 feet each to build. The amount of stock subscribed is $45.000. The directors say the road will be placed immediately under contract. On the Sandy River there are 77 bridges and trestles and eighteen and one-tenth miles of road. Stock $63.500; cost $118,500.

The town of Embden, in Somerset county, foolishly put $45,000 into the Somerset railroad, which has not given it a cent's benefit. The town has defaulted its bonds and a majority of the townspeople favor repudiation of their whole debt. There is nothing to pay it with. It is a poor little farming town of 800 people. There is no village and no manufacturing. There seems to be no way out of the trouble for the town. Anson, although heavily in debt, is much more favorably situated. Its village has been given a good start by the railroad. Its industries are increasing. Anson issued $27,500 of 7-per-cent. bonds and $24,000 of 6's in aid of the railroad. It has been offered 30 cents on the dollar for the bonds. Of the others, $6,000 have been bought in by the town for 50 to 75 on the dollar. The town proposes now to refund its entire present debt of $118,500 in a new series of 4 per cent. 10-40 bonds.—Journal.

Washington.

We learn that a lady belonging in Cherryfield, 55 years of age, who has never seen either the steamer Lewiston or the City of Richmond, although they have both been on the route at different times for a number of years, and have made landings at Milbridge, only about four miles distant, is going to leave her native town, on Monday next, and go to Boston on the occasion of the grand excursion per steamer Lewiston.—Machias Republican.

York.

The Press says the two burglars arrested in Lebanon, Monday, were arraigned before Judge Bufford, at Portsmouth, and pleaded not guilty. Owing to the importance of the case, and the inability to secure the attendance of witnesses, the case was continued until Thursday forenoon at 11 o'clock, the respondents being each held in the sum of $1,000. In default they were taken back to jail.

THE GARFIELD MEMORIAL FAIR.

MEETINGS OF VARIOUS STATE BOARDS—ENTHUSIAM SHOWN BY ALL.

Last evening was another busy season at the headquarters of the fair committee at the Ebbitt House. An informal meeting of Board for the State of Wisconsin was held in room 26, Mr. F. H. Howe, chief clerk of the Post Office Department, in the chair. After informally discussing the situation, the Board decided to go home, and will meet again to-morrow evening at the Ebbitt House to complete its organization.

The Board of Commissioners for the State of Georgia met yesterday afternoon in room 94, Ebbitt House, and organized by the election of Hon. Virgil Hillyer as Chairman and John T. Irvine, of the National Republican, Secretary. The other members of the Board being Hon. Walter L. Clift, Judge William Reid, Hon. James Devereux, Charles P. Freeman, Louis Seidner, Milton B. Caldwell, William D. Bard, and George M. Fisher. The Board, after preparing a circular addressed to the people of the State and transacting other requisite business, adjourned to Monday, the 9th instant, at 4 P. M.

OTHER STATE BOARDS.

The boards for the States of Nebraska, Arkansas, Massachusetts and New Jersey, were also in session during the evening, and sent off in the aggregate more than 10,000 circulars to all parts of the country. The Board for the State of Maine met in room 26—Hon. Walker Blaine in the chair, and Major W. H. Mills, Secretary—and disposed of a large amount of business, as did also the Board for the State of New Hampshire. Colonel Edward Webster has been appointed a commissioner to represent the Territory of New Mexico, and has already entered upon his labors, and has appointed a committee of one hundred citizens in the Territory to aid the undertaking. The corresponding secretary is constantly in advice of the coming of large donations and exhibits, indicating that the interest in the undertaking throughout the country is unabated. The Board for the State of New Hampshire completed its organization last evening by selecting Hon. Thomas L. Tullock as chairman and Thomas J. Lasier secretary.—National Republican Oct 6.

THE BICYCLE.

LONGEST CLUB RUN—THE BOSTON RAMBLERS BREAK ALL RECORDS.

The Boston Ramblers' Bicycle Club on Saturday last made the longest all-day club run on record, covering 120 miles without any apparent effort on the part of the riders, who finished the long distance in splendid condition. The run was called on the Thursday previous, so that none of the men had any training, and, on Saturday morning, the following named members started from Boston at 4:30: A. H. Forbush, H. B. Smith, W. P. Haskell and E. R. Benson. They reached Waltham at 5:40, then rode through Auburndale, Newton, Lower Falls and Wellesley to South Natick, which place was reached at 6:35. After breakfast the party rode back to Waltham, to Lexington, Arlington, Medford, Malden, Saugus, Lynn, Peabody and Salem, which latter place was reached at 1:35, the cyclometers registering 47 miles. The riders then pushed on to Gloucester, which place was reached at 3.45. They then took the direct road to Salem, reaching there at 6:P. M. Here they were joined by several members of the Hawthorn Club, who escorted them through Swampscott and Lynn to Saugus. Here they were met by other members of the club, who rode home with them through Medford, Cambridge and Brookline, reaching Hotel Vendome at 11.50 P. M., just 19 hours from the start—the cyclometers registering 120 miles. The Boston Ramblers now hold the records for the longest club run and the four longest and individual road rides in America.

THE OHIO ELECTION.

The result of the election in Ohio, Tuesday, was a surprise to both sides, and a disappointment to all lovers of good order, who believe in a proper observance of the Sabbath day. For, as has already been stated, the leading issue in the campaign was the temperance legislation of the last Legislature, or, in other words, whether or not the saloons and brothels shall be run full blast on the Sabbath as well as all other days in the week. On this issue the Democracy and liquor dealers were, of course, firmly united. As a general thing, Ohio is always a Republican State when questions of national importance are at stake, but this was an off year, and while the allied opposition have, by the lavish use of money and every other device known to unscrupulous politicians, worked night and day to carry their point, the Republicans, evidently feeling that there ought to be no question as to the outcome of a contest where morality was arrayed against riotousness, did not put forth the necessary exertion to poll their full vote. The result is that the opposition, with the assistance of that floating population always in the market, have carried the day, and now send forth their purchased victory as the edict of the people. Their success will be short lived. The people of Ohio, having now learned from experience the danger of being too sanguine, will, we believe, in 1884, rise in their might and redeem the State by a rousing majority. Ohio will again be counted in the Republican column in the next Presidential election.

The result of Tuesday's contest at the present time indicates that the opposition have elected their State ticket by 20,000 to 25,000 majority and carried fifteen of the twenty-one Congressional districts. In the present Congress Ohio has fifteen Republicans and five Democrats. The State gains one member under the new apportionment.

[Lewiston Journal.]

Ohio made a bad showing for the Republican and temperance cause in the election Tuesday. While the State has been very close during the past twenty years, yet the Republicans have carried it fifteen times out of twenty by a plurality ranging from one to twenty-five thousand in a vote of 500,000 or more. The Republicans, however, have had a majority very rarely. In 1877 the Democrats carried the State. In 1879 the vote stood 336,261 Republican, to 319,132 Democratic, and 18,217 scattering. In 1881 the vote stood 312,735 Republican, 298,426 Democratic 6,460 Greenback and 16,597 Prohibitory party. The temperance legislation of the last Republican Legislature, although very mild and unimportant from our point of view in Maine, yet roused the powerful liquor element of Ohio and led them to give the Democrats the benefit of their money, their work and their votes, and thus secure a triumph of both the rum power and the Democracy. The liquor dealers are jubilant over their victory. Though temporarily defeated, the Republicans may well take more satisfaction in a defeat under such circumstances than can the Democracy with a victory which makes the party simply an attachment to the rum power. "The mills of God grind slowly, but exceeding fine."

MR. BLAINE'S DIPLOMACY.

[N. Y. Tribune.]

The English editors have discovered that Mr. Blaine's arguments in relation to the Panama Canal had a serious side. When the correspondence was originally published they professed to be highly amused by the work of a "diplomatic amateur." The sterner moralists were shocked by so shameless a display of "ignorance," "bad manners," and "Yankee smartness" on the part of a Foreign Secretary who apparently had not learned the rudiments of international law. Croakers and satirists were agreed on one point—that Lord Granville in replying to Mr. Blaine completely refuted the American argument. Yet strangely enough, a large section of the English press is applying Mr. Blaine's "scatterbrain" logic to the Suez Canal. The Spectator, for example, has proposed that England should be vested with the wardenship of the canal and be empowered to station permanent garrisons at Port Said and Suez.

These are the lines on which the American Secretary of State would have settled the Panama Canal question. He claimed for our Government the privilege of keeping garrisons at the mouths of the canal and of invading the adjacent territory when occasion should require. "The one conclusive mode," he wrote, "of preserving any isthmus canal from the possible "distraction and destruction of war is "to place it under the control of that "Government least likely to be engaged "in war, and able in any and every event "to enforce that guardianship which it "will assume. The United States offer "by such control that absolute neutralization of the canal respecting European "Powers which can in no other way be "certainly attained and lastingly secured." The argument which Lord Granville was credited with refuting so successfully ten months ago is now taken up by a large majority of English journals and pronounced worthy of the most serious and deliberate attention.

Mark another fact. The English journals are unable to justify their own action in Egypt on the grounds defined by Lord Granville in his replies to Mr. Blaine's letters; nor can they make an effective use of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty as a precedent in determining the future of the Suez Canal. The Pall Mall Gazette, in opposing the wardenship plan on the score that the permanent occupation of the terminal points of the canal would be contrary to the whole spirit of Mr. Gladstone's policy, suggests that the channel and its approaches shall be exempted by international action from all naval or military operations. The war ships and transports shall be free to go in and out at all times, but "no act of belligerency shall be permitted within the "Isthmus, or within three miles of Port "Said on the one hand or of Suez on the "other." This would be a literal application of the principles of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. If there should be a war between Great Britain and the United States the vessels of either belligerent would be by this treaty exempt from "blockade, detention or capture" within the channel and a distance of three miles from either mouth and the adjacent territory could not be invaded. Lord Granville suggested that the United States by calling an international congress might make this principle binding upon the European Powers.

In like manner, the Pall Mall Gazette continued: "Suppose that the Panama Canal, precluding any act of belligerency within the channel and the country through which it passes. But it is forced to admit that it is easy to point out the anomalies of such an arrangement." It is so easy to do it that the scheme is utterly impracticable. The Clayton-Bulwer rule would render such a campaign as has recently been waged in Egypt, with the canal as a base of operations, a glaring violation of international law. English prestige on the Nile is now based on the assurance of a repetition of the campaign if there be another military revolt, or the influence of any other foreign Power becomes predominant there. It is idle to suppose that Mr. Gladstone's Government will impair that prestige by international action which may preclude military or naval operations on the Isthmus.

Of one thing, therefore, Americans may be sure. In relation to the Suez Canal Lord Granville will not act upon the benevolent advice which he gave to Mr. Blaine regarding the Panama Canal. On the contrary, if the wardenship of the Suez Canal be accorded to Great Britain, with the privilege of occupying and fortifying Port Said and Suez, Mr. Blaine's position in the Panama controversy will be logically affirmed, so far as analogy goes. English editors with quick perceptions, like Mr. John Morley, appreciate this fact, and give warning that Lord Granville after repudiating that doctrine in his controversy with Mr. Blaine cannot adopt it as a principle of action at Suez." For a diplomatist whose work was originally pronounced "ignorant" and "amateurish," Mr. Blaine's argument seems to have borne the practical tests of time and experience remarkably well.

Considering the zeal, pertinacity and industry with which Gen. B. F. Butler has pursued the nomination for Governor of Massachusetts, his letter accepting the honor from the Democracy is very cool, even chilly. So long a time was allowed to pass before he took any notice of his nomination that it was suspected that he really intended to decline it with thanks. He explains his delay by saying that he called his friends and clients together to give him their advice before he made up his mind. Either Gen. Butler's ambition has lost much of its fire since the days when he used to "burglarize" political conventions for the sake of a nomination, or he is playing a part now. But the General's hand has not lost its cunning, and his letter of acceptance is as ingenious and as characteristic of the man as anything that has lately come from his pen. He admits that he has "changed relations" with those with whom he has acted politically, which is a neat way of saying that he has been in every political party in the country. And his explanation that he has been consistent while all the parties have been revolving about him is very good. In politics, parties may be wrong. Butler is sure to be right.—N. Y. Times.

Mr. Howard Carroll has been nominated as candidate for Congressman-at-large in New York. The nominee is the son of Gen. Carroll, who was killed at Antietam. He was educated in Germany, and, since 1873, has been connected with the New York Times. A year ago he married the daughter of John H. Starin, the steamboat king of New York.

The course pursued by the Democratic party in Congress during the last sixteen years has proved conclusively that there can be no greater political error than to regard the maintenance of such a national party as being wholesome and serving any useful purpose in contributing toward the progress of the national prosperity or the preservation and strengthening of our free institutions. And yet during the entire sixteen years referred to the Democratic leaders have been telling the people that the mission of the Republican party is ended, and that the party itself ought to go out of existence.—Phila. North American.

The results of diligent inquiry by Tribune reporters indicate a favorable condition of business in New York city. The hotels have been crowded this fall with buyers from all parts of the country, as they have not often been in years past. Among manufacturers and wholesale dealers, the assurance is given that trade has seldom or never been more vigorous. Sales are 10 to 25 per cent heavier than they were last autumn. The demand comes from all parts of the Union, is not speculative, and very nearly equals the supply. This is an encouraging outlook, for the state of trade in New York reflects pretty accurately the condition of the country's mercantile health.

PERSONAL AND MISCELLANEOUS.

Governor Colquitt, of Georgia, accompanied by several prominent business men of the South, will visit Boston and the industrial centres of New England sometime this month.

Miss Kate Hillard, known to magazine readers as "Lucy Fountain," whose Essays on English Literature have delighted many audiences, sailed on Saturday on the Italian steamship Archimede for Marseilles, intending to spend the winter in Rome.

Wendell Phillips leads a quiet, retired life in his new house on Common street, Boston, where he has succeeded in making his immediate surroundings resemble very closely those of the old Essex street home. He has declined all lecture engagements, and will probably be seldom seen or heard in public this winter.

In purchasing and presenting to the University of Vermont the library of the late Hon. George P. Marsh, United States Minister to Italy, Mr. Billings has carried to fulfillment an old desire of the deceased scholar and diplomat. Years ago Mr. Marsh made a will leaving his library to the University, but later was forced to change it, on account of the impairment his means suffered in the public service.

A singular enemy of Prince Bismarck is a man in Potsdam, who lost his only son in the war of 1870, which he attributes to the agency of the Prince, and whom he regards as his son's murderer. Taking a hint from the caricaturists, who have made the three single hairs of the Chancellor's bald head famous, he wreaks his vengeance in an original manner. He is the owner of a lot in the cemetery at Potsdam, where, since the interment of his son, he has erected a fine mausoleum, on the top of which is placed an artistically sculptured ow, the head and features of which bear a striking resemblance to those of Prince Bismarck, the three single hairs included. A few years ago the man built a house, over the cornice of every window in which is carved a Bismarck head, the historical three hairs being represented in the shape of as many cannon. Quite recently he built another house with the same portrait decorations, this time however, having three sergents take the place of the cannon in the Prince's capillary ornament.

THE FRENCH KID

Is a fine bird, and is a native of every clime. Fine specimens are often seen in the mountain fastnesses of Bancock St., hovering on the nutritious sardine box and the finny june bottle, which has taken a tropical luxuriance in this quarter. A fine pair of the quadrupeds can be seen most any day ferreting building the boulevards, with their beautiful shell-like ears in constant motion, shelling the bonehire fly from their rich pumice—attached to an a-cheric soap cart. Sometimes their shape is very like a rat, no of the old sewer ramblers. And Mary's lamb of skule house fame, is not free from the mastercpiing proclivities of the kid. The hide of the protean animal is much sought for by shoddy boot makers. And you can generally pin it as a fact, that when you see a stock of real French Kid Boots advertised, that they are made from this numerous animal; or that it is a dodge to sell some old bruc-a-brac stock which is valuable only to the antiquary. The

DONCOLA BOOT,

The name of which acts as an electric battery on some of the onlookers who are in the shoe business, may be claims to a French descent; but do claim to be the best boot in the market. You can see by the chin-pauses of other dealers that we are the only dealers in the genuine article.

HIS BROTHER'S MURDERER.

The Trial of Hurd.

SKOWHEGAN, Oct. 11. The trial of Eugene M. Hurd, for murder, began here this morning. The prisoner was brought into Court at ten o'clock, neatly dressed in a black suit of clothes and attracted much attention. Upon arraignment for murder of his brother he pleaded not guilty in a strong, clear voice. A jury was immediately empanneled, Attorney General Cleaves interposing but one peremptory challenge and the counsel for the defendant three. County Attorney Greenleaf ably opened the case to the jury, detailing the circumstances of the horrible crime.

The State offered testimony showing that the deceased, on the fifth day of August last, went to his brother's house, some 50 rods distant, to drive his brother's horse out of a piece of grain; that as he passed through the door yard a slight altercation took place between them, and the deceased passed on. After returning with the horse from the grain, as he was again passing through the door yard, a second slight altercation took place and the prisoner shot him with a gun, killing him instantly. The Government offered testimony as to former threats made by the prisoner to take the life of his brother, and of his indifference and statements after the commission of the deed, and closed the testimony.

Hon. S. D. Lindsey opened the case for the respondent, and Eugene Hurd the prisoner was placed upon the stand. He testified that when his brother came over the morning of the murder, he made an assault upon him and he (the prisoner) ran into the house; that his brother again came back and threatened him, and started towards him with a club in his hand and he shot him. He further testified that he was in fear of his life, and that a former quarrel existed between them. The prisoner was subjected to a long and critical cross-examination by Attorney General Cleaves and it is expected the testimony will be closed to-morrow.

FIRE IN MILLTOWN.

Loss $32,000.

CALAIS, Oct. 11. At the fire in Milltown, Maine, at half-past eleven last night, the property destroyed consisted of one shingle mill, one planing mill, one gang saw and rotary mill, one dwelling house, a large quantity of valuable lumber belonging to Gates & Wentworth, one gang saw mill belonging to H. F. Eaton & Son. The loss is estimated at upwards of $30,000, and insured for $15,000; also eight lumber cars belonging to the St. Croix and Penobscot Railroad, valued at $3,000; insured $1200. The fire originated in the shingle mill and it is believed to be incendiary. A strong northwest wind was blowing and it was only with great labor the village was saved.

UNITARIAN CONFERENCE.

In Session in Augusta.

AUGUSTA, Oct. 11. The various meetings of the Unitarian Conference to-day have been largely attended and much interest manifested. A business meeting was held at ten o'clock, with Hon. Joseph Dane, of Kennebunk, President of the Association, in the chair. Rev. C. C. Vinal of Kennebunk, Secretary and Treasurer read the minutes of the last annual conference and his report as treasurer for the year. Rev. Dr. Sheldon, of Waterville, State Missionary, submitted a paper showing what the denomination was doing in mission work in Maine. Much of his time has been spent in Aroostook county, where fertile soil offers a fine field for the propagation of the liberal doctrine. He earnestly recommended the sending of a minister to Houlton. Northern Aroostook also gives much encouragement and welcomes the apostles of Unitarianism with open hands.

It was moved and seconded that Rev. Dr. Sheldon be employed as missionary for the ensuing year, to devote six months to the work on a salary of $600.

Reports from the different societies were called for and ninety delegates reported. Some churches which had representatives at the Conference did not report as the delegates were not present at the meeting.

The question of assisting the Unitarians at Farmington in maintaining religious services in that town until the society could become self-sustaining, was taken up and elicited considerable discussion. The hour for adjournment having arrived, the matter laid over until the next business meeting.

Rev. Thomas Hill, D.D., LL.D., of Portland, read a paper on "The writings attributed to St. John." Rev. W. R. Alger, of Portland, addressed a large audience in the afternoon on "The special privileges of Liberalists in Religion." In the evening Rev. J. B Greene, of Boston, delivered an eloquent sermon on "Faith which works by Love."

FROM PORTLAND.

The Women's Congress.

PORTLAND, Oct. 11. The tenth congress of the association for the advancement of women met here at 2:30 this afternoon in the City Hall. The first executive session met at ten o'clock in the morning. Reports were presented from the committee on science by Prof. Mira Mitchell, of New York; on reforms and statistics, by Mrs. E. L. Mason, of Wisconsin, and on art, by Mrs. Martha Mackay, of Indiana. Prof. Mitchell stated that scientific papers presented by women at the association for the advancement of science at Montreal were far above the average. Ninety-three summer schools of science were an increase, and women were more and more employed as assayers. Mrs. Mason's report emphasized the philosophy of reform which assumes that human perfection is not the all prevailing type and that certain persons and methods must exist in order to reform deformed beings; that women must band together as invincibles to attack vice, vanity and panity. Mrs. Mackay reported Ohio as leading in art work, Indiana and Illinois ranking next, while at the extreme west and south there is little or no art work, or study and a memorizing of art facts; there were further details which prove the great value of the meetings.

THE PRESIDENT IN BOSTON.

A Brilliant Reception.

TO-DAY'S PROGRAMME.

BOSTON, Oct. 11. The weather to-day is not promising for the outdoor exercises in connection with the reception of President Arthur, low temperature and indications of rain prevailing; but notwithstanding this the streets along the route of the procession are crowded with crowds, the suburbs particularly contributing a large quota of the number. Business is greatly at a standstill. The public schools have been dismissed and Boston has put on the usual gala appearance attending similar events of public interest. The first note of preparation in the formal exercises of the day was the formation of an escort procession which was to accompany the Governor, Lt. Governor, the Executive Council, Governor's staff and members of the State Government to the train conveying the President and his party from Fall River. This consisted of the National Lancers and Roxbury Horse Guards and the carriages containing the State dignitaries between the two military organizations. Leaving the State House at 9:15 the procession passed down Beacon street to Fremont, thence to Boylston street, Columbus Avenue and Dover street to the point of crossing of the Old Colony Railroad. Upon the arrival of the procession at this locality the streets were found to be densely packed with people, while windows, house tops and roofs of manufacturing establishments in the vicinity were black with humanity.

A Special Train

from Fall River was expected to arrive at 9 30, but it was somewhat past that hour when it arrived. The reception of the President and party was brief and consisted of an exchange of courtesies and a few words of welcome on the part of the Governor and representatives of the Webster Historical Society, whose guest the President is to be tomorrow. The party were immediately shown to their carriages and the escort took the line of march for the Common. The enthusiasm of the people, who densely crowded the several streets traversed during the passage of the procession, found expression in clapping of hands and waving of handkerchiefs and in several marked instances in hearty and prolonged cheers. Passing through Dover and Berkley streets and Columbus Avenue the procession reached the Common soon after 10 o'clock.

Upon entering the Common the Presidential party was received to a salute from the battery. As the President passed down the line he was received with cheers by an immense crowd that had gathered in the vicinity of the parade ground. The party then took a position between the first and second corps of cadets which were flanked by the brigade's column and then moved in the following order:

The Procession.

Squad of mounted police; 8-sound brigade; Brigadier Benjamin F. Peach, Jr., chief of staff; Boston City Band; ninth regiment, Col. William Stockman, eight companies; fifth regiment band; fifth regiment, Col Wm. A Bancroft, eight companies; Hayerhill Band, eighth regiment, Col. Charles Leyer, twelve companies; artillery battalion, Major G. S. Merrill, five companies; Higgins Mounted Band, cavalry battalion, Major Chas. A. Young, two companies; Boston Cadet Band; first corps of cadets, Lt. Col. Thos. F. Edwards, four companies; the President's party; carriage containing the President, Gov John D. Long, Adjutant General, A. Humbert; carriages containing other State and city dignitaries; Salem Cadet Band; second corps of cadets, Lieutenant Col. Edward Hobbs, two companies; first brigade, Brig.-Gen. N. C. Wales; Springfield Brass Band; second Regiment, Col. Benj. F. Bridges, eight companies; sixth Regiment Band; sixth Regiment, Col. Smith M. Decker, twelve companies; Reeves' American Band; first Regiment, Col. Arnold C. Wellington, twelve companies; Co. B., light artillery, Capt. Henry C. Wordell; Co. F Cavalry, Capt. Sherman H. Fletcher. The column moved over the following route: Park Square, Columbus avenue, West Newton, Washington, Franklin, Milk, Iowa, Canal and South Market streets, Merchants Row, State, School, Season, Dartmouth and Boylston streets to Hotel Brunswick.

An Ovation.

From the moment the procession moved from the Common on its long march the President received a continuous ovation to which he responded courteously and constantly. On reaching Berkeley street the President left the line, and, escorted by the First Corps of Cadets, proceeded to the Hotel Brunswick, to a stand erected in front of the hotel, from whence he viewed the procession as it marched by. This hotel having been designated as his headquarters during his sojourn in the city, was elaborately decorated within with flowers and plants and without with masses of bunting. The crowds in the vicinity of the hotel were denser than at any other point on the line of march. The 600 students of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology were massed in an effective group upon the recessed front of a large building opposite the hotel. It was expected that the review would begin at twelve o'clock but, owing to a delay in forming and the slow progress of the procession over the route, by reason of the crowded condition of the streets, it was half past one before the Presidential party made its appearance. The crowd manifested its pleasure by a clapping of hands until the President's carriage had reached and opposite the Institute, when there was a perfect roar of cheers. Upon alighting from the carriage the President's party was met by Mayor Green and the committee of the City Government, by whom he was escorted to their rooms in the hotel. After a brief rest the party went to the stand and watched the parade of soldiery of whom there were about 3000 in line.

The President remained on the stand until the entire line had passed and then retired to the hotel, where the lunch given by the city government was served. Mayor Green and several members of the city government were present. The public reception at Faneuil Hall, fixed for 2.30, was delayed until late in the afternoon, the President going to the hall directly from the hotel.

The Reception

to the President at Faneuil Hall drew a large audience, which completely filled the hall and galleries, many ladies being present. About four o'clock the President arrived, accompanied by Mayor Green, the Reception Committee, Secretaries Lincoln and Chandler, Congressman Candler, Hon. Daniel G Rollins, New York, Hon. Stephen M. Allen, President Webster Historical Society, Chester A. Arthur, Jr., Fred T. Phillips, President's Private Secretary, and others. The appearance of the party on the platform was the signal for a perfect storm of applause. When order had been restored Mayor Green presented President Arthur, who said:

"You have my most sincere gratitude for your cordial and enthusiastic reception. I know well these demonstrations with which the day has been crowded do not proceed from the promptings of personal regard for me; they only give voice to the unstinted loyalty of Boston and Massachusetts to the Government of the United States. (Applause.) I know they show the respect that the citizens of this good old Commonwealth and this magnificent city have for the federal authority, which they themselves have helped to construct, and in that spirit I accept and thank you for your gracious greeting."

Brief and, happy remarks were then made by Messrs. Lincoln and Chandler. The reception to-night at Hotel Brunswick was a very brilliant affair, fully 3,000 being present. The decorations were elaborate. The President was first introduced to the ladies and then the gentlemen. After the guests passed the President they continued to the supper room, thence to the music room, and after a promenade returned to their carriages. Arrival and departures were witnessed by a crowd numbering thousands, kept back by the police. Full dress was one of the requirements of the event, and it was closely complied with. All ladies were arrayed in magnificent costumes.

To-day's Programme.

At 7:45 A. M., the Ancient and Honorable Artillery will form a line, and at 8 A. M. will march to the Brunswick to escort the President and party, members of the Webster Historical Society, and other officials. The line of march will be thence to the Old Colony depot, where the Ancients will take a special train for Marshfield at 9:15 A. M.

The Presidential party will move on another special at 9:30 A. M. At Marshfield a temporary station has been arranged by the railroad officials, about a mile from the Webster farm, at which all the trains will stop. Upon arrival the President will be escorted to the scene of the day's exercises. After the exercises the special train will leave at 4 P. M. for Boston, and that for the President and party at 5 P. M.

The President will dine at the Brunswick at 7:30 P. M., and later may accept an invitation to attend the Boston and Globe Theatre.

It is possible the President may return to New York on Thursday night, as he has an important engagement in that city on Friday.

THE OHIO ELECTION.

20,000 Democratic Majority.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 11. At three o'clock seven hundred and sixty-three precincts show a Democratic gain of 24 390, indicating a Democratic majority in the State of 35,000.

Hamilton County.

CINCINNATI, Oct 11. Complete but unofficial returns from Hamilton county show the following Democratic majorities: Newman, 10 650; Okey, for Judge of Supreme Court, 9 903; Whitl, for Board of Public Works, 9 754; Hawkins, for Sheriff, 1,111; Davison, for Clerk, 937; Pugh, for Prosecuting Attorney, 2,636; Follett, for Congress in the First District has 839; Jordan, for Congress in the Second District has 1 763. The Republicans claim the election of Ford for Sheriff.

Democratic Factory—Roughs and Rum.

DAYTON, Oct. 11 In a political quarrel at the Soldiers' Home last night, August Wenecke stabbed John Jean in the groin. In another political row a saloon keeper was fatally stabbed. There were several other rows caused by interference of roughs at the polls to prevent votes being cast against the saloon in wards. Whiskey and disorder were the chief factors of the election.

Congressmen Elected.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 11. The returns today trom the State election are meagre and no systematic effort has been made to figure the majority on the State ticket. The Democrats, however, claim the State by 25,000 or more, though the Republicans think it will not exceed 20,000. The Congressional delegation will probably stand 6 to 15 in favor of the Democrats. The Republicans claim the election of Taylor, Robinson, Kiefer, Updegraff, McCormack and consider the contest close on Morey, McClure and McKinley. The Democrats claim the election of Follett in the 1st district, Jordan in the 2d, Murray in the 3d, Le Fevre in the 4th, Seney in the 5th, Hill in the 6th, Hurd in the 10 h, Neal in the 12 h, Converse in the 13th, Geddes in the 14th, Warner in the 15th, Wilkins in the 16th, Wallace in the 18th, Page in the 20th, Farrar in the 21st.

Reported Death of Dr. Updegraff.

CINCINNATI, Oct 11 The Commercial special from Hillsboro, Ohio, says Dr Updegraff, Republican, successful candidate for Congress in the 17th district is reported dead. His home is removed from the telegraph office and the report cannot be verified, but it is known he was low with Bright's disease.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Republican Gains.

WHEELING, Oct. 11. The returns from the 2nd District give large gains for the Republicans, but not enough to elect John W. Mason, Republican candidate. He telegraphs to-night that he is beaten by about 500, which is a reduction of about 1600. Gibson, Dem., is said to be elected by 1000 to 1500 in the 4th District. Kenna, Dem., is doubtless re-elected in the Kanawha District.

Goff's Handsome Majority.

WASHINGTON Oct. 11. A despatch from Wheeling indicates that Goff, Rep., for Congress has over 1000 majority.

INDIANA.

A Wife Murderer Taken from Jail by a Mob.

EVANSVILLE, Oct. 11. At ten minutes past two this morning a hundred men from Posey County, on horseback, quietly surrounded the County jail, awoke the Sheriff, and demanded the keys of the jail. They then went to Redman's cell, took him out and put him in a buggy and drove off with him. Upon leaving a number of shots were fired and the fire bells rung to notify the public, but before there arrived the squad were out of sight going down Third street, leading to the Mount Vernon road. The Sheriff was warned only a moment before the mob arrived at the jail, but before he could get to the outer door to lock it the mob was on him and held him a prisoner. The police, on arriving, commenced firing down the street in the direction taken by the mob, and one of their number, Dave Murphy, was killed. Redman was in jail for wife murder.

Later.

A general fight ensued between the police and mob, during which Redmon was killed, receiving over two dozen bullets.

MASSACHUSETTS.

A Hotel Burned.

NORTH ADAMS, Oct. 11. The Ballou House, quite a large public house here, was burned by an incendiary fire early this morning, and some of the boarders and servants who were sleeping on the top floor had narrow escapes. One lady and a fireman were hurt. The losses on the building are $10,000; partly insured.

Gov. Long Nominated for Congress.

BROCKTON, Oct. 11. The Republicans of the 2nd Congressional District to-day nominated Governor John D. Long for Congress.

NEW YORK.

The Western Union Company.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11. At the annual meeting of the Western Union Telegraph Company to day the following directors were elected: Norvin Green, Thomas T. Eckert, Edwin D. Morgan, John Van Horne, Augustus Schell, Hardison Durkee, Jay Gould, Russell Sage, Alonzo B Cornell, Sidney Dillon, Cyrus W. Field, John Pender, M P., Henry Weaver, Perry H Pine, Robert Lenox Kennedy, Hugh J. Jewett, J. Pierpont Morgan, F L. Ames, Edwin D. Worcester, Wm. D. Bishop, C P. Huntington, Geo. R. The Crazy Frenchman.

The Frenchman Ernest Dubourgne, who yesterday on 14th street stabbed a number of persons with a pair of measuring compasses, was arraigned in the Jefferson Market Court this morning. He said he had been attacked in the street, but evidence of his assault states that no person had assaulted him. Mrs. Hanley, one of his victims, lies in the hospital in a dangerous condition, and he was committed to await the result of her injuries.

Mr. Thomas has secured the exclusive right in this country, for two years, to the score of Gounod's "Redemption," principally with a view to its performance at this festival. The chorus is already in training and will number six hundred.

THE LAST SAD RITES over the remains of Miss Dunbar were very impressive under the voice and manner of Rev. Mr. Gerrish and the presence of her little children. The elegant floral harp they brought added to the interest of the occasion, as did also a beautiful crescent of flowers contributed by the teachers, who were present in large numbers. There was a great abundance of flowers from her numerous friends. Among the many was a wreath presented by Alderman Thayer, whose house had been her home for a long time.

S. Sands, Edward Jordan and J. A Robinson, Trustees.

THE BOSTON EXHIBITION. All the Boston dailies concur in pronouncing the second annual exhibition of the New England Manufacturers' and Mechanics' Institute a great success, and columns are devoted to the description of its varied attractions. The correspondence published in our exchanges from the six New England states is all of the same tenor, and those of our citizens who have visited the fair confirm the press reports. To put the whole thing in a nutshell we may say that art, mechanics, inventive skill, and the natural sources of wealth of a large section of the South, have respectively the fullest representation at the institute, and that to these are added the restful charm of the best of music rendered by some of the most famous bands we have.

PREPARED FOR TRAIN ROBBERS. On the midnight train to Brunswick last week were two Bath gentlemen who tell the following story with its moral: Near them were two gentlemen of fine appearance and apparently well used to the ways of the world. One of them was asleep, and when the conductor came along punching people awake, swinging his lantern and demanding "tickets," he still continued his nap. The conductor touched him upon the shoulder and said "tickets," he still slept; a more vigorous punch, and the gentleman opened his eyes and asked what was wanted, put his hand in his pocket, and delivered something over to the official, remarking that it was all he had, and began to sit up and look around. The rest of the tickets in the immediate neighborhood were collected, and the conductor came back and smiling significantly, remarked, "Excuse me, sir, but I can't take these," and opening his hand, displayed two gold rings as bright as new rings can be. The shout that arose woke the gentleman completely, and taking the rings he simply remarked, "Excuse me, conductor, but I did think you were a train robber." Explanation proved it a veritable case of unintentional train robbing, and that the rings were bought by the gentleman for western travel. They were no good on the Maine Central.—Bath Times.

AMUSEMENTS.

Baird's Minstrels.

A crowded house greeted Baird's Minstrels in the Opera House with enthusiastic applause. The company is a strong one and the performance gave excellent satisfaction. The entertainment abounded in fun and the assemblage was continually in an uproar. Some of the features were novel and highly interesting. The contortions of the Egyptian "boneless wonder" were very remarkable. The movements of the clog team of nine performers were exceptionally fine. The audience united in declaring the entertainment one of the best in the minstrel line given in Bangor for a long time.

Unity Hall To-Night.

At Unity Hall this evening a literary and musical entertainment will be given. Miss Anna B. Snowe will give a humorous and dramatic reading and she will be assisted by well known vocalists of this city. An evening of much pleasure is to be expected. Tickets are on sale at Silsby's. The following is the programme:

Kellogg-Brignoli Concert.

There is a steady demand for seats for to-morrow evening's concert by the Kellogg-Brignoli Combination, and a brilliant audience is assured. There are plenty of good seats still to be had. The programme is a choice one, and from the reputation of the artists of the company, a most enjoyable entertainment may be expected.

The Danites.

The Danites will be played in Norombega on Saturday and Monday evenings next. The Providence Journal says: "A large audience, as was predicted, greeted the McKee Rankin Company in "The Danites" last evening. Miss Lizzie May Ulmer, as Billy Piper, wins her way right to the hearts of the people, and is sure to become one of the brightest and most popular stars in the country. Mr. Ulmer as the Judge, Mr. Young as the Parson and Mr. Mitchell as Sandy, are unexcelled. Miss Ulmer was greeted with applause upon her entrance, and at the close of the third act, when Mr. Young was called before the curtain."

Oliver Doud Byron.

The favorite actor, Oliver Doud Byron, supported by Miss Kate Byron and a strong company, will appear at the Opera House next Tuesday evening in his celebrated play, now in the thirteenth year of continued success, "Across the Continent." Mr. Byron has made a large fortune on this play, which abounds in startling situations, and strong melo-dramatic effects. There is, besides, a great deal of fun in the piece, and in the second act some good variety business is introduced. "Across the Continent" will be produced with special scenery brought with the company. The sale of seats opens on Saturday morning.

Notes.

The Warren Testimonial will take place at the Boston Museum on the afternoon and evening of Saturday, Oct. 28th. Mr. Warren will appear in two of his most famous characters belonging to two of the best old comedies—one on each occasion.

Mr. Thomas Fraser, advance representative of Miss Annie Pixley, is in town, arranging for the appearance of his star at the Opera House next week Thursday. She will produce her new play "Zara," of which we hear good accounts.

Police Court.

Freeman Landers, for drunkenness, second offence, was yesterday sentenced to jail for 60 days.

Dod Miles, for drunkenness, was fined $5 and costs.

New Advertisements.

J. C Norton & Co. call attention to the "Royal" flour.

Frank D. Pullen & Co. are out with another attractive advertisement this morning. Their stock, which is complete in all its branches, is so large that it requires considerable space even to mention a few specialties, but the advertisement will repay a careful perusal. An efficient corps of gentlemanly attendants are always on hand to display the goods.

H. D. Thurston announces in another column that he still retains a residence on this mundane sphere and has a large and choice assortment of boots, shoes and hats at his store on Main street.

DEATH OF THE OLD WAR HORSE.

Respectfully dedicated to the soldiers in the late war who loved and cherished their old comrades in arms. Brig. Gen. Charles W. Tilden, formerly Colonel of the Sixteenth Maine Regiment, after his capture at Gettysburg and confinement, after his escape at Greenville, Tenn., and treatment in Libby Prison, from which he escaped, received from his old regiment the present of a noble horse, with all the usual accoutrements. Lieut. Frank Higgins, of the Sixteenth Maine Regiment, says "We followed that horse and rider into the wilderness and during the rest of the war, and the noble steed was at Appomattox when Lee surrendered. I think every soldier of the command would have followed him and his rider wherever they might have led." This horse was tenderly cared for by his owner till a few weeks since, when he was buried under the direction of Gen. Tilden.

BY REV. NATHANIEL BUTLER.

Farewell, my horse! thy work is done,
Thy splendid form lies low,
Thy limbs of steel have lost their strength,
Thy flashing eye its glow.

No more thy quivering nostrils annex
The battle from afar,
No more to swift thy flying feet
The plains with thunder jar.

For thou wert born a hero soul,
In days when heroes fought,
When men, borne by thy glorious strength,
Immortal laurels sought.

Seated upon thy nerve strung form,
Another life was mine,
And well I knew the same high thrill
Ran through my soul and thine.

A throne thou wert to sit upon,
And true as steel within,
Whene'er I felt thy brave heart beat
My own has braver been.

And when the bugle's call to charge
Over the column ran,
Thy arching crest, with thunder clothed,
Loved best to lead the van.

Upon the march, with tireless feet,
Through mountain gorge and plain,
When others strayed thy place was kept
Through all the long campaign.

But now thy last, long halt is made,
Thy last campaign is o'er
The bugle call, the battle shout
Shall thrill thee never more.

Where art thou gone—old friend and true?
What place must thou to fill?
For it may be thy spirit form
Somewhere is marching still.

Are there immortal vales and hills,
And pastures living green,
And sunny glades and waters sweet
For such as thou didst seem?

Here there are those whom we call men,
Whose souls, full well I know,
Another life may not deserve
One half so well as thou,

And na ures such as thine has been
That other life may claim,
And God may have a place for them
Within His wide domain.

His armies tread their glorious march
Over the eternal plain,
Their leader rides a snow white steed—
Who follow in his train?

We may not ever meet again
But, wherever I go,
A cherished place within my heart,
Thou shalt have, old friend, I know

God made us both and we have marched
From friends with all thou wert here,
To ly know I should not blush
To meet thee anywhere.

REMINISCENCES OF WEBSTER.

HIS HOME AT MARSHFIELD—A FEW PERSONAL ANCEDOTES.

[By Ben Perley Poore.]

It was my good fortune to visit Marshfield during the life time of its illustrious owner, and to enjoy his hospitality. It was just such an estate as "the old English gentleman" would select as a home, comprising about 2 000 acres of undulating land on the green shore of Marshfield, bordered on one side by the ocean. When Mr. Webster began to practice law at Boston he used to go every summer to the town of Sandwich, on the Cape, and pass several weeks there in shooting and fishing. The establishment of a glass foundry at Sandwich spoiled the sport there, and Mr Webster next went to Marshfield, where he had been told that the gunning and fishing was excellent. He was so well pleased with the place that he purchased the farm of his host, Capt. Thomas, whose father, Nathanel Ray Thomas, a noted loyalist, had followed the British troops to Nova Scotia Mr Webster had the Saxon "land greed," and not only enlarged the boundaries of the Thomas farm, but greatly improved it Between the buildings and the ocean were three ponds, fed by never failing springs, the smaller one used by a large number of ducks of different varieties while in the larger one was a flock of wild geese, well domesticated, although it was necessary to cut off the pinions of their wings to keep them from emigrating as flocks flew overhead in the spring and fall Once, Mr. Webster said, the tamed flock responded to the cry of the leader of a passing wild flock overhead and started to follow them on foot, going quite a distance before their departure was discovered

The house at Marshfield (which was destroyed by fire a few years since) was a large wooden structure, with long piazzas fringed with the Virginia creeper and roses. There were nine rooms on the first floor, if I remember right, opening from one into the other, so that it was necessary to use them all to get about the house In the parlors were a great variety of pictures, engravings, bronzes, and curiosities, while the library, the western room of all, was finished in somewhat of a gothic shape Here hung the fine portrait of Webster and Lord Ashburton, taken after their negotiation of a treaty between the United States and Great Britain, and now in the Capitol at Washington, Congress having purchased them of Mrs Fletcher Webster. There was also a small silhouette profile, cut out on black paper, in a simple frame, bearing the inscription. "My excellent mother, D W. Near by stood on a pedestal a fine marble bust of Pope Pius IX., sent by his Holiness to Mr. Webster A large library chair was Mr. Webster's favorite seat, and in book cases were books of reference He kept his agricultural library and a very few law books in a study but in the garden, but his valuable law library was in the Boston office

Another interesting room at Marshfield was the dining-room, with its large sideboards covered with rare china and glassware including a capacious punch-bowl Breakfast, in accordance with the English custom, was served in a breakfast-room which overlooked the ocean, and on the walls of which hung a series of spirited engravings, representing the different phases of a fox hunt. The cook was a colored woman named Monica McCarty, who was born and raised as the slave of Judge Cranch, of Washington. Mr. Webster purchased her freedom for $600, with the understanding that she was to work it out. He paid her her wages, however, without any reference to this indebtedness, and as she received many presents from the family and visitors, she had when Mr. Webster died about $2,000 in the savings bank. She was certainly an admirable cook, as every one who enjoyed Mr Webster's hospitality could testify.

In the guest-chamber at Marshfield, when I was there, was a set of mahogany furniture which had evidently been used by Mr Webster at his home in Boston—ponderous and massive, and respectable in appearance as was its owner. But the comfortable bed afforded me no morning nap, for soon after sunrise there was a rap at the door, and a sonorous voice asked if I would not like to get up and go and see the cattle. I, of course, hurried on my clothes, and going down into the spacious hall, was joined by Mr. Webster, who had his trousers tucked into thick boots, a broad-brimmed felt hat on his head, and in his hand a long malacca staff The walk through the barns gave me a ravenous appetite for breakfast, and some blue-fish, which Mr Webster had caught the day before, tasted better, I think, than any dish of fish I have ever eaten, and I have eaten a good many.

After breakfast we went out and sat on a rustic bench beneath a magnificent elm tree near the house, the limbs of which began to shoot out not far above the ground, and formed a large symmetrical canopy. It was soon after the nomination of Gen. Taylor, and Mr. Webster had not been over-pleased with the course of the Boston Atlas, with which I was then connected as its Washington correspondent. Some of his criticisms on leading Whigs who had deserted him at the nominating convention for the hero of Buena Vista were not complimentary, but he did not complain. There was something singularly winning and attractive to me, then a young man, in his rich, flexible voice, and his dignified, graceful manner;

When, afterward, Mr. Webster became Secretary of State, he had as one of his private secretaries my brother-in-law, Mr. Charles Lanman, and I saw a good deal of him at Washington. In private life he was simply delightful, unless something occured to cross him. His fund of anecdote and of personal reminiscences was inexhaustible. He had a keen sense of the ludicrous and loved and appreciated nice touches of eccentric humor. There probably has never been a man on this continent who was personally acquainted with so many of its citizens, whether distinguished or obscure. He was a man of wonderful imagination, and in his grave, constitutional arguments, as well as in his private conversation, his imagination revelled by giving poetic shapes and aspects to common things. He would turn from the petty squabbles of political life to the grand old poetry of the Hebrew Bible, which awakened echoes in his own poetic soul. One of the most memorable instances of his imagination was left ored by his parting words to the crowd of Washington politicians—his parting words they were—when, on the night of the nomination of Gen. Scott, he was disturbed his slumbers by their call on him to rejoice with them at the prostration of his life long hopes Rising superior to the office-holding crowd, and to the occasion, the noble soul of the "Expounder of the Constitution" sought consolation in his own high thoughts while scornfully looking down on the little men before him "I will sleep sound this night," said he, "and if I wake I will know the hour by the constellation, for it is a glorious night"

Like Charles James Fox, the great English statesman, he possessed a sovereign scorn for money and a disregard for pecuniary obligations He felt bitterly toward the close of his life the obligations which he had incurred by relinquishing his profession to plead the cause in Congress of the New England manufacturers, some of whom discourteously reminded him at different times that he had received their money and should be their servant Dr. Ruggles said that once on parting Mr. Webster cordially remarked. "Come down to Washington, come often; I want none of your shot-legged, 60-day fellows about me with their three days' grace—I want men—long-legged ones—who go striding down the country like those pre-Adamite birds in the old Connecticut Valley" It was one of these cotton spinning patrons who said to Mr. Webster when it was rumored that he was going abroad "I hear, Mr. Webster that you are going to England. What for, Mr. Webster—what for?" "I am going" said the solemn, dark-browed son of thunder, I am going over to see the Duke of Devonshire" What for Mr Webster—why do you want to see him?" "Because," said Mr Webster, "because he never made a bar gain in his life"

Mr Webster, in his magnificent eulogy on John C Calhoun in the Senate Chamber, said, half wonderingly, half admiringly "He had no recreations He never seemed to feel the necessity of amusement." Webster had his recreations He was an enthusiastic angler, and equally enjoyed catching cod off Marshfield or bass at the Great Falls of the Potomac But his favorite recreation was superintending the cultivation of soil, especially at Marshfield, where the rural sounds and the grand aspect of nature ministered to the delight of his acute sensibilities.

In June, 1852 the United States Agricultural Society, headed by its founder Peter Dent, the Hon. Marshall P Wilder, called on him to pay their respects. Mr Wilder addressed him as the "Farmer of Marshfield" Said he in reply:

"You do me no more than justice when you call me 'Farmer of Marshfield' My father was a farmer, and I am a farmer When a boy, among my native hills of New Hampshire, no cock crowed so early that I did not hear him, and no boy ran with more avidity to do errands at the bidding of the workmen that I did. You are engaged in a noble enterprise. The prosperity and glory of the Union are based upon the achievements of agriculture."

Mr. Webster had a fund of anecdote and personal reminiscences, not only about Washington Congressional life and its cases in the courts, but about his rural rambles at Marshfield. Once as he used to relate with great gusto, he was tramping over the Marshfield meadows shooting ducks with Seth Peterson, when he encountered a couple of Boston sporting snobs, who happened to be in trouble just then about crossing a bog. Not knowing Mr. Webster, and believing him to be strong enough to help them over the water they begged to be conveyed to a dry point upon his back. The request was complied with, and after the cockneys had paid him a quarter of a dollar each for his trouble they inquired if "Old Webster was at home," for as they had had poor luck in shooting, they would bother him with a call. Mr. Webster replied "that the gentleman alluded to was not at home just then but would be as soon as he could walk to the house," and then added that "he would be glad to see them at dinner." As may be presumed, the cockneys were never seen to cross the threshold of "Old Webster."

Mr. Webster's chosen "crony" in his later years was Charles March, much younger than he was, and also a New Hampshire man. Well educated, polished by travel, and free from pecuniary hamper March was almost delightful companion, and his wit keen as Saladin's cimetar, never wounded Fletcher Webster was also a great favorite with his father, possessing what Charles Lamb called "the lost art of conversation" Sometimes when Mr Webster's path had been crossed, and he was as black as night, March and Fletcher would, by humorous repartee and witticisms, drive the clouds away and gradually force him into a conversation, which would soon become enlivened by the inextinguishable laughter of the gods"

COOKED FOOD FOR ANIMALS.

First, animals are quite unlike. In one of Dr. Miles' experiments a given quantity of food eaten by one animal gave an increase of 194 pounds, while the same quantity of food eaten by two gave an increase of only 3 pounds. Different breeds, as well as different animals, might therefore give diverse results. Secondly, the results vary with the age of the animals, cooked food being more important for young pigs, or those under six or nine months, than for much older ones. Thirdly, much will depend on the care, management and feeding Fourthly, unless the right quantity is given, a portion of the food may do more harm than good, of which the well known fact may be cited in proof, that over rations of food to cattle have made a smaller increase than more moderate ones. Harris, in his excellent treatise on the pig, says: "We have never known any one who has tried steaming and boiling, with even ordinary, conveniences, who was not perfectly satisfied that it was more profitable than to feed raw This fact is established by common experience"

We will cite several out of many cases in proof, of experiments made partly under our own observation, by skillful farmers with whom we were personally acquainted, and whose management for close profit was such as to prevent any loss by injudicious care. A long series of experiments made by a farmer who found pork making the most profitable part of farming, and who submitted everything to weighing and measuring, proved that the value of corn was doubled by grinding and scalding. Ninety pounds of hot water were poured on 16 pounds of meal, in a covered tub, where it stood from 12 to 18 hours, according to the weather. He found meal mixed with boiling water, decidedly better than when mixed with cold water. It never required more than five pounds of meal to make a pound of pork. As a proof of his excellent management, he had a hog less than nineteen months old which weighed, when dressed, 766 pounds, and several others nearly as large. Another skillful farmer arrived at nearly the same conclusion as to the relative value of feed. His long-continued experiments, conducted with careful weighing, gave the value of corn in the ear at 62 cents, dry meal 87 cents, and cooked meal $1.12. Another experimenter found that it required a little less than four pounds of cooked meal to make a pound of pork, and about seven pounds in the ear. Still another experimenter found that pork made from whole corn costs 22 cents a pound, while that from cooked meal was only four and a half cents a pound. Several years ago, Samuel H. Clay, of Kentucky, found by a series of experiments that one bushel of dry unground corn made five pounds, ten ounces of live pork, while one bushel of whole corn, boiled, made fourteen pounds, seven ounces.—Country Gentleman.
